tvONE, a leading manufacturer of cutting-edge video and multimedia processing equipment, announced that a CORIOmaster mini video wall processor is driving the new Church of God – a Worldwide Association (COGWA) – TV Studio at its Texas headquarters.

The high-tech HQ is a vital communication centre for the church's members and includes the delivery of its weekly broadcast news magazine, In Accord, among other outreach programs and publications.

The In Accord TV set was designed by Kelly Cunningham, Assistant Manager AV/Data/Web at COGWA, and utilizes a 1×3 monitor wall of NEC 46" tiles.

Created with viewer engagement in mind, the new video wall displays vibrant colors, multiple shooting angles, and ample space for guest interaction.

tvONE dealer Dave Pollock, from supplier AV Dallas, notes: “The church approached AV Dallas with the desire to install a high-functioning 1×3 video wall to act as a ticker/multimedia backdrop for their broadcast series.

“The church asked for the ability to display any combination of scrolling news ticker feeds, multiple overlaid images, and/or video clips, as well as custom-made static and animated graphics.”

“We wanted the monitor wall to be a focal point, yet required it to look architecturally integrated,” adds Cunningham. “CORIOmaster gives us the most flexibility for the price point on how we integrate and use our setup. Its ability to easily adapt to a 1×3 monitor matrix – or any format we wanted to come up with – made it an instant hit for us.”
